Welcome to the Spring 2017 issue of AAR Magazine.

This issue of AAR Magazine offers a summation of a very productive year. We feature the scholars and artists in our creative community at the culmination of their research and look at how the Fellows’ Project Fund has expanded their possibilities for collaborating and presenting their work in intriguing ways. We update this year’s exploration of American Classics with reports on a February conference and previews of events still to come, including an exhibition featuring new work by artist Charles Ray. You will also find a close look at AAR’s involvement in archaeology and details of a new Italian Fellowship sponsored by Fondazione Sviluppo e Crescita CRT.

And, of course, we introduce the Rome Prize winners and Italian Fellows for 2017–2018!

Vi diamo il benvenuto al numero “Primavera 2017” dell’AAR Magazine.

Questo numero dell’AAR Magazine riassume il lavoro prodotto in un anno eccezionale. Vi presentiamo gli studiosi e gli artisti della nostra comunità creativa al culmine della loro ricerca e siamo lieti di mostrare quanto il Fellows’ Project Fund abbia ampliato le loro possibilità di collaborare e presentare le proprie opere in modo affascinante. Aggiorniamo la panoramica fatta quest’anno sugli American Classics con il resoconto del convegno tenutosi a febbraio e con le anticipazioni sui prossimi eventi, tra i quali una mostra con una nuova opera dell’artista Charles Ray. Daremo uno sguardo da vicino all’impegno dell’AAR nel campo dell’archeologia e alla nuova Borsa di studio per Italiani finanziata da Fondazione Sviluppo e Crescita CRT.

E ovviamente vi presentiamo i vincitori del Rome Prize e gli Italian Fellows per l’anno accademico 2017-2018!

WHEN IN ROME
Current Fellows share the favorite places they’ve discovered in Rome
As an institution of advanced research, the Academy supports the kind of critical thinking that is necessary to sustain a civil society. Across all of our programs and disciplines, the work of scholars and artists reveals and reinforces the complexity of history, the diversity of human endeavor, and the benefits derived from working across cultures and borders. Thus the projects of the Academy Fellows and Residents who live and work within this unique community reflect the role of the arts and humanities in contemporary life. At this moment, it is more important than ever that we recognize the value of ideas—and the significance of the Academy, as a national institution with international impact, in championing them.

The Academy and its Fellows are increasingly engaged in collaborative work throughout Rome, the Mediterranean basin, and beyond, and new partnerships, as well as the Fellows’ Project Fund, provide additional opportunities for international dialogue and connections. Meanwhile, our robust Conversations/Conversazioni series brings scholarly and creative work of the highest caliber to ever-broader audiences.

As we continue to look forward, we recognize the strong leadership of Director Kim Bowes, who leaves us at the end of her term to return to the University of Pennsylvania. We all greatly appreciate and applaud Kim’s numerous contributions. We are also pleased to welcome John Ochsendorf (2008 Fellow), who joins us as director in July.

Fellow wins the Vilcek Prize

Born in Jamaica and now based in New York City, artist Nari Ward (2013 Fellow) describes the year he and his family spent at the Academy as crucial to his understanding of “how you place yourself” and “who you are.” The insights he gained continue to impact his work. Nari uses unexpected materials to make striking installations and assemblages that spark public conservations and individual reflections on such topics as race, poverty, immigration, and identity.

According to Holland Cotter of the New York Times, “few 21st-century artists have made stronger and more textured visual statements about racism, failed justice, and exile-at-home” than Nari has, and “none have come up with images more poetic.”

Nari has been named the recipient of the 2017 Vilcek Prize in the arts, an honor and $100,000 award presented annually to an immigrant who has made “lasting contributions to American society through their extraordinary achievements” in a selected discipline in the arts and humanities. His art can be seen this spring and summer at the ICA Boston in Nari Ward: Sun Splashed, a touring exhibition organized by the Pérez Museum of Art in Miami.

Reconsidering the Classics

Shane Butler (1999 Fellow), who chairs the Department of Classics at Johns Hopkins University, recently edited a new book about the ever-changing influences, uses, and interpretations of antiquity: Deep Classics: Rethinking Classical Reception (2016).

Shane studies and teaches Latin literature from antiquity through the Renaissance, and his wide-ranging interests encompass media history and theory; sensation, cognition, and aesthetics; rhetoric and poetics; the history of sexuality; and the history of classical scholarship.

In reflecting on his experience as a Fellow, Shane recalls: “In Rome there’s no escaping the sensory texture of life, whether lived now or centuries ago. My time at the Academy ratified my commitment to become a critic and historian of lived, embodied experience, and not just of facts and figures. Years later, that’s still what I’m trying to do.” That commitment is evident not only in Deep Classics but in Shane’s current projects: “a book on the sounds of the ancient world” that he is coediting and a monograph “about the gay Victorian author John Addington Symonds, who spent much of his life traveling through and writing about Italy and its past.”
A champion for cultural property

As the Cultural Resources Manager and Army Archaeologist at Fort Drum, New York, Laurie W. Rush (2011 Fellow) is the steward for nearly 1,000 archaeological sites and serves as a diplomatic liaison to Native American tribes with ties to the Fort Drum region. She also educates troops at Fort Drum about cultural property protection during military operations and shares her expertise nationally and internationally.

“The opportunity to live and work in Rome linked me to the international community of colleagues and military officers who are committed to cultural property protection during the course of military operations,” she recalls. In addition, while a Fellow she studied the Carabinieri TPC, the Italian police force dedicated to crimes involving antiquities and art. Laurie and coauthor Luisa Benedettini Millington published The Carabinieri Command for the Protection of Cultural Property in 2015, and they are planning another book, which Laurie describes as a “reference for communities facing conflict or disaster” that discusses “methods Italians have used to successfully save and protect their heritage for over one hundred years.”

Mystical Symbolism to open at the Guggenheim

This spring, the Guggenheim will open a new exhibition curated by Vivien M. Greene (2004 Fellow), Mystical Symbolism: The Salon de la Rose+Croix in Paris, 1892–1897. It provides a new perspective on symbolism by focusing on a series of six significant yet little known annual Salons initiated by Joséphin Péladan, an author, critic, and Rosicrucian. These Salons, where spiritual, mysterious, and visionary themes and imagery predominated, brought together artists from Belgium, Finland, France, Italy, the Netherlands, Spain, and Switzerland. They served as a kind of “cosmopolitan crossroads and clearinghouse for ideas from the symbolist movement,” Vivien notes, “not unlike the way the Academy functions as a cultural crossroads for artists and scholars today.”

Vivien’s Rome Prize Fellowship supported her research on Italian divisionist painting of the 1890s, the focus of both her dissertation and Divisionism/Neo-Impressionism: Arcadia and Anarchy, a 2007 exhibition she curated for the Guggenheim.

Vivien has been on the curatorial staff at the Guggenheim Museum since 1993 and is currently a Senior Curator. Mystical Symbolism is on view in New York from June 30 to October 4, 2017, and then travels to the Peggy Guggenheim Collection in Venice.

INTRODUCING:

The 2017–2018 Rome Prize winners and Italian Fellows

Meet the American Academy in Rome’s newest group of scholars, artists, writers, and composers, representing some of the most talented minds in the United States and Italy.

FOUR FELLOWS IN THE SPOTLIGHT

Harold M. English Rome Prize

SANFORD BIGGERS
Sanford, a native of Los Angeles currently living in New York City, creates artworks that address challenging and far-ranging topics and offer new perspectives on established symbols.

Samuel Barber Rome Prize

ASHLEY FURE
Ashley is an assistant professor in the Department of Music at Dartmouth College. In recent years, her work has shifted regularly between immersive installations and concert music. Her project, Da Vinci Shaken, will attempt to bridge these two approaches.

Millicent Mercer Johnsen Post-Doctoral Rome Prize

BISSERA V. PENTCHEVA
Born in Sofia, Bulgaria, Bissera is an associate professor of art history at Stanford University. She will employ digital technology and textual research to study the phenomenon of animation in medieval art across Byzantine, European, and Islamic traditions.

Italian Fellow in Ancient Studies

EMILIO ROSAMILIA
Emilio is preparing a monograph for publication about the often overlooked ancient Greek city of Cyrene (currently Shahat, Libya) during the classical and Hellenistic periods, before its annexation by the Romans.

Each year, distinguished artists and scholars from around the world are invited to the Academy as Residents.

During their stay, Residents live and work as part of the community, serving informally as a resource for the Fellows and participating in special Academy-wide events—concerts, exhibitions, lectures, readings, and instructional walks in Rome. Meet some of our Residents for this spring/summer.

Check aarome.org/events for information on upcoming events with the Residents.
All that Jean-Louis Cohen does is informed by his double identity as an architect and historian. His research focuses on the way architecture is influenced by broader socio-political contexts, urban development, and cultural exchanges. His 2011 book, Architecture in Uniform: Designing and Building for WWII, upends the conventional belief that World War II was a static period for architecture, instead proposing that it precipitated the modernist movement. His recent lecture (in collaboration with the British School at Rome), Memory Erased/Regained: Marseilles At War, expanded on this idea, drawing on new research to show how these ideas hold true for Marseilles during and after the Vichy regime. Reflecting on his time at the Academy, Jean-Louis noted, “The short month I have spent within its walls has been extremely productive...I have left with 40,000 words of writing.” Jean-Louis has authored numerous books on Le Corbusier, including Le Corbusier: An Atlas of Modern Landscapes (2013), which accompanied a major exhibition at the Museum of Modern Art in New York, as well as Mies van der Rohe (2007) and Casablanca, Colonial Myths and Architectural Ventures (2002), among many others. He is the Sheldon H. Solow Professor in History of Architecture at New York University Institute of Fine Arts.
In 1975, biking through New York’s Little Italy, photographer Susan Meiselas came across a group of young girls who, inadvertently at first, and more intentionally later, became her subject matter, culminating in the photographic series Prince Street Girls. Susan’s lecture at AAR, Prince Street Girls Revisited, will reconsider this body of work, now that the girls have grown and the neighborhood has become a chic, wealthy enclave. In addition to searching for “Prince Street Girl” Pebbles, who now lives in Italy, Susan plans to use her time in Rome to expand on her project akaKurdistan, a website for aggregating images and building a collective memory for the Kurdish people. The site grew out of her six-year project curating a hundred-year photographic history of Kurdistan. Susan has a long history of working with marginalized people, and she first gained attention for her documentation of the insurrection in Nicaragua in 1978 and human rights issues in Latin America. These projects led to the publication of her 1981 monograph Nicaragua, her work as an editor and contributor to El Salvador: The Work of Thirty Photographers, and her codirection of the films Living at Risk: The Story of a Nicaraguan Family and Pictures from a Revolution.
Chris Reed
Mercedes T. Bass Landscape Architect in Residence, 3 April–1 May

A leader in the field of landscape design and urbanism, Chris Reed has re-envisioned downtown areas and waterfronts in major cities, including Dallas, Detroit, Shanghai, and Green Bay. Chris is the founder and director of the landscape architecture firm Stoss, which specializes in urban design and landscape revitalization, and codirector of the Master of Landscape Architecture in Urban Design Degree Program at Harvard University’s Graduate School of Design. He is interested in an interdisciplinary approach to landscape architecture, taking into account the many factors—ecological, political, economic, and social—that impact the development of a city or place.

“For landscape architecture to be relevant as a discipline, it needs to do more than just check the sustainability boxes,” he said in an interview with the American Society of Landscape Architects. “It needs to set out a broader set of cultural, social, and environmental ambitions that allow the discipline to evolve with an evolving world. Design can enable us to address some of the bigger challenges acted out on the world stage.” His current research looks at the impact of ecology on design and the way landscape systems can inform city-planning strategies, particularly with regards to addressing issues of climate change, social and economic inequality, and increasing cultural diversity. Chris is the coeditor of Projective Ecologies, a volume of research and drawing.
Richard Gluckman, a principal at Gluckman Tang Architects, has dedicated his career to designing buildings for artists, public arts institutions, art foundations, galleries, and art collectors, often collaborating with artists and dealers. His first project was the renovation of a townhouse for Dia Art Foundation founders Heiner Friedrich and Philippa DeMenil, an experience that was foundational to his career. “I was introduced to the work of minimalist artists of the late 1960s and 1970s and installed two site-specific works by Dan Flavin,” Richard told the Modelo blog. “Their art had a profound impact on my thinking as an architect.”

At AAR, he will present Space Framed, discussing his firm’s work with historic renovations and interventions, from his first project for the Dia Art Foundation to his current work on the University of Pennsylvania Museum of Archeology and Anthropology. His other major projects include the Museo Picasso Malaga (2004), Mori Arts Center (2003), the renovation of the Whitney Museum of American Art (1995–1998), and The Andy Warhol Museum (1994). “I’m going to look at a couple of things [during my residency] that have relevance to our current work: interventions into early- to mid-century Italian industrial architecture and modes of display of ancient artifacts in historic buildings,” Richard notes. “And I’m going to get lost and see where that leads.”
“Shaping up to be the most provocative thinker in current jazz,” according to Rolling Stone, Jason Moran is a composer, musician, artist, and the artistic director for jazz at The Kennedy Center. In addition to releasing critically acclaimed recordings, including his debut Soundtrack to Human Motion and his solo piano disc Modernistic, Jason is interested in exploring the physical spaces where jazz is played, and their role in the lore of a city. His lecture at AAR will include a discussion of his exhibition for the 2015 Venice Biennale, STAGED, which recreated architectural elements and spaces in historic New York jazz venues, including the Savoy Ballroom and the Three Deuces. With this exhibition Jason says he was looking at “how time challenges a relationship between music and its audience, how architecture challenges that as well.” His work looks at the link between art, music, and social history to unearth the complex heritage of jazz and show how it has been used as a tool for both oppression and healing.

Jason received a MacArthur Fellowship in 2010 and recently launched his own recording label, Yes Records, and LOOP magazine. His first solo museum exhibition will open at the Walker Art Center, Minneapolis, in 2018.
Images from McCormick’s lecture at AAR, The Fall of the Roman Empire: How Should We Study It in the 21st Century?

Michael McCormick
Lester K. Little Scholar in Residence, 10 April–8 May

Working with scientists, climate change experts, and archaeologists, historian Michael McCormick is constructing the most detailed historical record to date on European climate, offering unprecedented insight into the impact climate shifts had on ancient civilizations. Michael has a long-standing interest in the many factors that influenced human evolution. He now chairs Harvard’s university-wide Initiative for the Science of the Human Past, which brings together geneticists, archaeological scientists, climatologists, environmental, computer and information scientists, humanists, and social scientists to explore human history. His lecture at AAR, The Fall of the Roman Empire: How Should We Study It in the 21st Century?, will draw on this interdisciplinary approach to reevaluate the fall of Rome. Using advanced scientific techniques and digital practices, Michael has unearthed new findings, including archaeological evidence of a mass death.

Ann Hamilton
Roy Lichtenstein Artist in Residence,
May–July, 2017

Responding to the architecture and history of specific places, Ann Hamilton creates immersive, sensory installations to explore the power of communal exchanges and the representation of individuals and communities. At the Academy, Ann will discuss several recent works that elucidate fundamental aspects of her practice, with a special focus on her text concordances. Language and text are central to Ann’s work, represented as tools that fuel our memory and imagination. With habitus, which reflects on the rich history of textiles—another focal point for the artist—visitors were invited to interact with large, circular panels of white fabric draped from the ceiling. They were accompanied by a collection of writing that explores the social and material vocabulary of textiles. With ONEEVERYONE, a public art project installed at the Dell Medical School at the University of Texas, Austin, she investigates the relationship between photographer, camera, and subject. The project documents 21,000 people who have received or given care. Ann is the Distinguished University Professor in the Department of Art at The Ohio State University.
Fascinated by the quotidian, Charles Ray has become best known for his sculptural works that alter or upend everyday objects and scenes. Often creating larger-than-life but otherwise realistic depictions of people and things, Charles alters the way viewers perceive the familiar. His work playfully evaluates and critiques the history of sculpture—as with Horse and Rider, a nine-foot tall sculpture that depicts the artist seated on an exhausted looking horse, rather than the more traditional bucking stallion—while also offering complex observations.

“I’m really interested in what happens to a work as it tumbles through time and meaning is washed away,” he told The New Yorker. His work melds the beautiful with the unsettling, presenting viewers with immediate and striking works that insist on challenging both their perception and understanding.

Ray has been the subject of major exhibitions at the Art Institute of Chicago, Astrup Fearnley Museet for Moderne Kunst in Oslo, and the Whitney Museum of American Art in New York, among others. His residency coincides with an exhibition of his work at AAR—and the world premiere of a new sculpture (see p. 48).
David Lang

Paul Fromm Composer in Residence, 6 March–3 April

One of America’s most performed composers, David Lang is a virtuoso who brings together a passion for invention with a deep understanding of the classical tradition. He has a long relationship with AAR; he is a 1991 Fellow and currently serves as a Trustee. For his lecture Soundtracks this March, presented with Nicola Piovani (see p. 23), David discussed his compositions for film and the tremendous impact contemporary music has on cinematic narratives—an idea that has been of interest to him from a young age. “Much of this music, when played in a concert hall, could push mainstream classical audiences away, but in a movie theater the audience accepted it,” he told Slate. “A big part of what makes music work is the context you put it in, the other senses and disciplines it collaborates with. I have been trying to put my music in the proper context ever since.”

David won Best Score and Best Original Soundtrack at the 2016 David di Donatello Awards for his soundtrack to Paolo Sorrentino’s Youth. His other film work includes the score to Jonathan Parker’s (Untitled), the music for the The Woodmans, and the string arrangements for Requiem for a Dream. He won a Pulitzer Prize for The Little Match Girl Passion, and his scores have been nominated for an Academy Award and a Golden Globe.
Sharon Johnston & Mark Lee

William A. Bernoudy Architect in Residence, 19 June–28 July

Mark Lee and Sharon Johnston are the founding partners of the Los Angeles-based architecture firm Johnston Marklee. A firm with a global reach, they have completed projects in the United States, Europe, and South America, including cultural centers and galleries, master planning, commercial spaces, private residences, pavilions, and installation design. An alternative to Los Angeles’s history of extravagant architecture, their style was described in W Magazine as, “thoughtful, deliberate, and intent on solving architectural riddles in an elegant and comfortable way.”

They are currently working on the Drawing Institute at the Menil Collection in Houston—one of their most significant commissions to date—a renovation of the Museum of Contemporary Art Chicago, and the new UCLA Graduate Art Studios campus in Culver City, California. They are also the artistic directors for the 2017 Chicago Architecture Biennial.

In Los Angeles, Sharon and Mark will participate in the conversation Liquid Architecture with Los Angeles Times architecture critic and 2016 Resident Christopher Hawthorne, as well as composer and 2007 Fellow Andrew Norman (see p. 23). In 2016 Birkhauser published the book House Is a House Is a House Is a House on the firm’s work, and in 2014 2G published a monograph on Johnston Marklee.
When composer Lukas Foss arrived at AAR in the early 1950s, he was just beginning a remarkable career. Born in Berlin in 1922, Lukas and his family fled first to Paris and then, in 1937, to the United States. Although an immigrant, he became known as one of the most original voices in American composition, alongside Leonard Bernstein and Aaron Copland, who were also his great admirers.

During his fellowship, Foss met his wife, the painter Cornelia Brendel Foss. “We eloped,” Cornelia once told The New Yorker. “We had a secret wedding at the Campidoglio.”

Shortly after his return, Foss succeeded Arnold Schoenberg as the head of the composition at UCLA. He went on to serve as music director or conductor for the Buffalo Philharmonic, the Brooklyn Philharmonic, the Jerusalem Symphony, and the Milwaukee Symphony. He also returned to the Academy again in 1978 as a resident. He died in Manhattan in 2009.
This spring, the American Academy in Rome is once again convening thought leaders to consider the ideas, texts, songs, and images that define the idea of “America.” The events compose the newest season of Conversations/Conversazioni, which gathers scholars and artists for frank, wide-ranging discussions on a variety of topics in the arts and humanities.

The season kicked off in the fall with artist Ping Chong (2017 Resident), designers Michael Bierut (2016 Resident) and Michael Rock (2000 Fellow and AAR Trustee), novelist Colm Tóibín, and scholar Daniel Mendelsohn (2010 Affiliated Fellow, 2017 Resident), among others. “We’re thrilled to continue the series this spring,” said Mark Robbins, AAR President (and 1997 Fellow). “At this moment, discussions with such visionary researchers and practitioners are all the more important.”

The Helen Frankenthaler Foundation is the 2016–2017 season sponsor.
Here are examples of the work being generated by our Rome Prize and Italian Fellows. The ongoing dialogues and collaboration taking place at the Academy speak to a vibrant community, a cultural crossroads, shaping how we see ourselves and the past, present, and future.

E. V. Day, who makes sculptures and installations that memorialize moments of explosion, velocity, and spectacle, has recently become fascinated by baroque sculptor and architect Gian Lorenzo Bernini. Studying and experiencing the way he constructed seductive spaces and evoked motion and extreme emotion, she is finding inspiration for her own next series of large-scale works. E. V. is based in New York City.
Composer Jonathan Berger explores how and why humans engage with music and expresses the fragility and ephemerality of life through an awareness of the interplay of sound and space. His Rime Sparse for soprano and piano trio, with select texts from Petrarch’s Il Canzoniere, recently premiered at the Chamber Music Society of Lincoln Center. Jonathan is the Denning Family Provostial Professor in the Department of Music at Stanford University in California.

Jessica Marglin, an assistant professor in the School of Religion at the University of Southern California, investigates how disputes over the estate of Nissim Shamama, a Tunisian Jew who died in Italy in 1873, can provide fresh insights into nineteenth-century Italy and its place in the modern Mediterranean. The case revolved around determining Shamama’s nationality and touches on Italian, Jewish, Islamic, and European approaches to international law.
Historian Robert Clines is studying the life and experiences of Giovanni Battista Eliano, the only Jewish-born member of the Society of Jesus, in order to uncover the complex culture of conversion in the early modern Mediterranean. Robert is an assistant professor in the Department of History at Western Carolina University, in Cullowhee, North Carolina.

Architect Yasmin Vobis seeks to elevate the role and discourse of color as a fundamental aspect of contemporary architectural practice and production, disputing Giorgio Vasari’s theory relating “colore” to irrationality and lack of discipline. Yasmin is a principal of Ultramoderne, an architectural design studio in Providence, Rhode Island, and a critic in the Department of Architecture at the Rhode Island School of Design.
Writer Jack Livings is working on an untitled novel set in New York during the blizzard of February 1978. His stories have appeared in The Paris Review, among other publications, and have been awarded two Pushcart Prizes. His book The Dog, won the 2015 PEN / Robert W. Bingham Prize for debut fiction and was named a Best Book of the Year by the Times Literary Supplement. Jack lives in New York City.

Historian Caroline Cheung studies the artisans, skills, techniques, and organization of labor required for the storage and distribution of foodstuffs to feed the city of Rome. Caroline is a doctoral candidate in Ancient History and Mediterranean Archaeology at the University of California, Berkeley.
Leon Grek explores the role of translation and displacement in shaping the poetics of Republican Roman comedy and its reception by professional English dramatists of the late-sixteenth and early-seventeenth centuries. Leon is a doctoral candidate in the Department of Comparative Literature and the Interdisciplinary Doctoral Program in the Humanities (IHUM) at Princeton University.

Tomaso De Luca works in various mediums, including drawing, sculpture, installation, performance, and video to explore the role of the single man, and the correlation between gender, desire, art, and architecture. Tomaso is based in Milan and New York City.
Medievalist Silvia Armando is exploring the varied career of Ugo Monneret de Villard, an archaeologist, epigrapher, and architectural historian who devoted his life to the study of artistic interchange between the Christian and Islamic cultures of the medieval world. Silvia is an independent scholar based in Rome.

Visual artist Enrico Riley examines representations of biblical narratives as a commentary on present day interpretations of the black body and a way to express the vulnerability and suffering of human beings today. Enrico is an associate professor in the Department of Studio Art at Dartmouth College, New Hampshire.
Left

Jenny Krieger studies catacombs in order to understand how these underground burial spaces were built and, above all, who built them. She uses a variety of evidence—from inscriptions and painting styles to spatial analysis—to unravel how different teams of workman collaborated on construction and to bring to light this large, but still shadowy, group of Roman laborers. Jenny is a PhD candidate in Classical Art and Archaeology at the University of Michigan.

Right

Hussein Fancy's research and writing focus on the social, cultural, and intellectual history of religious interactions in the medieval Mediterranean. His current project rethinks the relationship between religion and trade by following the activities of criminal merchants—pirates and smugglers—who thrived in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. Hussein is an associate professor in the Department of History at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor.
Kristi Cheramie is drawn to the forgotten spaces and unrealized or erased histories of the built environment. She is revisiting and recovering sparsely documented phases of sites in Rome and then creating representations positioned between documented truth, unfinished business, and mythic tales of what might once have been. Kristi is an associate professor of landscape architecture at the Knowlton School of Architecture, The Ohio State University.

The Academy’s purported clandestine history (as a CIA outpost according to urban legend) was among the many topics discussed at Projecting Americanism Abroad, an international conference the Academy hosted in February that explored the Italian-American relationship during the Cold War. Organized by AAR Trustees Frank M. Snowden and Martin Brody, the conference brought together ten scholars in a range of disciplines to investigate “Americanism” and its impact on everything from nuclear policy and science to the trade union movement, architecture, music, photography, literature, jazz, and cultural diplomacy.

Over two days of presentations, questions, and discussion, several themes developed that began to define anew the parameters of Italian-American exchange during the Cold War. The term “Americanism,” for example, proved to imply not only freedom and democracy but also immigration, inequality, racism, and empire. Whether as a distant homeland pined after by American writer Ralph Ellison during his two-year fellowship at the Academy in 1955–57, or a metaphor for liberation in the essays and novels of Italian writer Oriana Fallaci, “America” also emerged as a potent, if paradoxical, symbol in the Italian imagination.

More concretely, the United States, in the form of the State Department, the CIA, the military, and other official branches of government, appeared to have had a far more pervasive presence in Cold War Italy than previously thought. Equally revelatory were the distinctly Italian origins, and fiercely political tenor, of jazz in Italy, from its early years in the 1910s through Fascism, World War II, and the onset of the Cold War thereafter. Also unexpected was the apparent debt owed to Italy’s Fascist-era architecture among some of the most celebrated buildings designed by Americans in the Cold War era, such as New York’s Lincoln Center or U.S. Embassy headquarters in Naples and New Delhi.

At the end of the conference, participants came away with a clearer vision of this notoriously opaque moment in modern history. They also gained renewed appreciation for the insights and discoveries that multiple perspectives can provide.
Fellows find numerous opportunities for cross-disciplinary research and for presenting their scholarly or artistic work during their residencies. Now in its third year, the AAR’s Fellows’ Project Fund enhances the practical experience of Rome Prize winners and Italian Fellows by funding collaborative work with colleagues at AAR and other national Academies and/or cultural and academic institutions in Rome and throughout Italy. Supported projects, which take place during the Fellowship year, include exhibitions, performances, site-specific installations, publications, symposia, or any proposal with a public component. Here is a sample of projects recently supported by the fund.

As her contribution to the Cinque Mostre exhibition, Danielle Simon—recipient of the Millicent Mercer Johnsen Pre-Doctoral Rome Prize and a PhD candidate in the Department of Music at the University of California, Berkeley—developed and served as musical director for performances of Il Cuore di Wanda (Wanda’s Heart), the first Italian opera composed specifically for the radio. With a libretto by the futurist poet Pino Masnata and music by the composer Carmine Guarino, the opera received positive reviews, but was never recorded and has not been performed since its initial broadcast in 1931. Danielle arranged for two performances of the opera, as well as a recording to make the work available to other scholars. E. V. Day, winner of the Henry W. and Marian T. Mitchell/Miss Edith Bloom Fund Visual Arts Rome Prize, collaborated with Danielle, serving as artistic director of the live performance and recording. The two also worked with Italian artist Zazie Gnecchi Ruscone to design costumes for the live performance.

Historian Hussein Fancy, in collaboration with three other Fellows, conceived a retelling of an infamous moment in Italian history—a thirteenth-century rebellion in Sicily popularly known as the Sicilian Vespers—as a puppet show. The Sicilian Vespers and the Tunisian Matins consists of multiple three- to five-minute monologues, each presented by a different historical figure from an island in the Mediterranean: Mallorca, Sicily, and Jerba. Hussein, an associate professor of history at the University of Michigan and recipient of the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation Post-Doctoral Rome Prize, notes that the aim of the show is to break the nationalist mold in which the history of the Sicilian Vespers is typically cast and to retell the episode as a shared history, one that binds Italy, Iberia, and North Africa. Hussein and Leon Grek wrote the monologues, drawing simultaneously on history and literature. Jonathan Berger composed the music, adapting selections from Verdi’s opera I vespri siciliani (whose story is loosely based on the historical incident). Drawings by Enrico Riley highlighted the complex aesthetic heritage of Sicily. Hussein and his colleagues worked with a professional puppet theater company to perform the piece at AAR in April. Caroline Cheung served as producer, and Kyle deCamp was consulting director.

Infinite Receptors is the title of a February exhibition of selected drawings created in Rome by Enrico Riley, the Jules Guerin Rome Prize Fellow and an associate professor of studio art at Dartmouth College. Enrico’s work is based on an idea of the black body being manipulated into what he calls a “meta-icon, efficient at absorbing a variety of stereotypes, misrepresentations, and expectations.” He also draws on multiple sources, including medieval Italian painting, historical and contemporary Roman architecture, and biblical narratives. Infinite Receptors was shown at the SACI gallery and was accompanied by a moderated talk at Museo Novecento, both in Florence. Both the exhibition and talk were part of a larger schedule of events, resulting from a collaboration among multiple private and public institutions, artists, musicians, and scholars in celebration of Florence Black History Month.

Inspired by the lyra and kemençe music of Crete and Istanbul, Christopher Trapani, recipient of the Luciano Berio Rome Prize and a student of music composition at Columbia University, created a new work for viola d’amore and electronics titled Tesserae. Grounded in a modal tradition, using small fragments of microtonal scales to assemble long expressive lines, it features the unique and intimate sound of the viola d’amore, performed by one of its foremost contemporary champions, Milan-based musician Marco Fusi. Tesserae received its world premiere in Rome at the Fondazione Isabella Scelsi on April 12; its U.S. premiere takes place at the Italian Academy at Columbia University in New York on April 26.
TWENTY-FIRST-CENTURY ARCHAEOLOGY
In 1948 teams of archeologists from the Academy traveled up the Tuscan coast to the abandoned town of Cosa. They were the first Americans granted a permit to excavate in Italy, and under the directorship of then Mellon Professor Frank Brown, began one of the first attempts in Italy to chart the history of a Roman town.

The Cosa Excavations began a long relationship between the Academy and archaeological fieldwork in Italy—Academy teams worked in the Regia off the Roman forum, on the Palatine hill, and even in AAR’s own parking lot, finding the first watermills on the Janiculum. In more recent years, the Academy has provided logistical support to four affiliated projects, run and funded by major American universities who use the Academy as a base for research, group meetings, and conferences. Today they represent some of the most cutting-edge examples of American archaeological research in the Mediterranean. They train hundreds of students in advanced archaeological practice and changing the way we view everything from the evolution of Roman cities to the lives of the urban poor.

The University of Michigan’s Gabii Project, affiliated with the Academy since 2010, is one of the largest projects in Italy. Its goal is to understand the shadowy origins of Roman cities by examining one of Rome’s neighbors that didn’t succeed: Gabii, located on the Via Praenestina. Directed by Nic Terrenato, the project has located a village of wooden huts from the eighth century BC, a settlement that lent Rome its first regular layout. Gabii has produced its share of spectacular finds, including perfectly preserved infant burials complete with jewelry and other ornaments and an enormous lead sarcophagus. More important for archaeology are the digital recording systems produced under the supervision of data director Rachel Opitz. Spearheading a new type of digital publication, which transforms born-digital data directly into the final report, the Gabii team is also changing the way large excavations make data and findings available to other scholars.

The Pompeii Archaeological Research Project: Porta Stabia, sponsored by the University of Cincinnati and led by Steven Ellis (2013 Fellow), is addressing another neglected aspect of Roman cities—the poor. This project has excavated an entire Pompeian neighborhood near the Porta Stabia, revealing a community dominated by small shops and adjacent tiny apartments, where poor Romans made fish sauce and ceramics, sold their wares in storefronts, and lived cheek by jowl with their neighbors. The research team has looked carefully at the spaces and environment of the ancient neighborhood, while also using studies of animal bones, plant materials, and charcoal to understand what its inhabitants ate and how they cooked.

Further south, in Sicily, a new affiliated project led by Alex Walthall (2013 Fellow) of the University of Texas at Austin and Princeton University is exploring another poor neighborhood. The Greek-founded city of Morgantina began as a small city of native Sicilians and grew to its greatest prominence under the tyrant-kings of Syracuse. The Contrada Agnenese Project at Morgantina is excavating an area of modest houses at the city’s edge, using advanced technologies to understand agricultural strategies, storage, and other ways that poor people benefited from and were exploited by state policies. Alex and his colleagues are trying to understand how the actions of leaders such as the Syracusan tyrants impacted both agriculture and the lives of the urban poor.

In addition to facilitating new excavation projects, the Academy is reexaminining its older projects. The archives of earlier excavations are treasure... troves of information, whether they are projects that were never published or providing opportunities to rethink older conclusions. In addition to rehousing all of the Academy’s archaeological records and materials in proper archival storage, the Academy has also activated new projects based on those archives.

The Academy’s Regia excavations in 1964–65 were never published, yet the project remains a benchmark for its time, both for the methods it used and the historical importance of the site, the legendary house of the priest-kings of Rome. Darby Scott (1966 Fellow, 1979 Resident), former Mellon Professor, is undertaking the publication of Frank Brown’s original project. Simultaneously, the Regia Revisited Project, led by Nic Terrenato of the University of Michigan and Paolo Brocato of the Università di Calabria, is reexamining the Regia archive and the excavated materials, revisiting Brown’s conclusions and, with them, the history of Rome itself.
In the spirit of Mark Twain’s The Innocents Abroad (1869), which brought American mythologies into relief through direct encounters with Europe, AAR invited celebrated artist Charles Ray, to explore the theme of “American Classics.” The new sculpture resulting from this invitation debuts in a two-work exhibition at the Academy in May, during the artist’s tenure as the 2017 Deenie Yudell Artist in Residence. The show is part of a year-long program investigating the enduring currency of antiquity in the contemporary world.

For many years, Charles has hiked in the Santa Monica Mountains, a coastal range in Southern California. Bound by major traffic arteries and some of the most densely settled areas of the United States, the Santa Monica range hosts a dwindling population of mountain lions, a vestige of the storied American frontier, struggling to survive in a habitat too isolated and too small to sustain it. His predawn walks in this environment doubtless inspired both of the exhibited works, but in each Charles also plays with conventions defining the canons of classical sculpture.

Shoe Tie (2012) recalls Boy with Thorn (1st c. BC), also called Spinario, a bronze sculpture from the Capitoline Museums. Charles’s work is a self-portrait, naked, like the classical figure, crouching down as if to retie his shoelaces. In doing so, he exposes his neck and so leaves himself vulnerable to an attack from a mountain lion. In Mountain Lion Attacking a Dog (2017), the commissioned work, Charles revisits a famed Hellenistic sculpture from the Capitoline Museums: Lion Attacking a Horse (Greek, 325–300 BC; restored in Rome in 1594). An icon of Rome and among the most storied works of art to survive from antiquity, this sculptural group was greatly admired by Michelangelo. Charles converts its naturalistic scene of primal violence into the vernacular of contemporary America, transposing it to an American wilderness encroached on and compromised by urban sprawl. Reimagining classical prototypes in a personal and culturally specific way, Charles confronts the uneasy truce between humans and a natural world threatened with extinction.

In two public lectures related to the exhibition, Charles discusses how his approach to sculpture explores American myths and is informed by closely looking at the art of the past. The exhibition is curated by Peter Benson Miller, Andrew Heiskell Arts Director.
The Academy and Fondazione Sviluppo e Crescita CRT, an initiative of the Fondazione CRT, are pleased to announce a new partnership to offer an Italian Fellowship at the AAR to an artist or scholar based in Piedmont. The first recipient of the Fondazione Sviluppo e Crescita CRT Italian Fellowship is Rä di Martino.

AAR Italian Fellowships provide a unique opportunity for artists and scholars to join the international Academy community where they can do focused work while also collaborating across disciplines. Recognizing the effect of time at the Academy, Fondazione Sviluppo e Crescita CRT has established this Fellowship to support creative and intellectual work in Piedmont. This also strengthens their commitment to providing transformational opportunities, which will be further emphasized this fall with the opening of OGR-CRT, a 215,000 square foot state-of-the-art innovation hub and contemporary arts center in Turin.

“Our partnership with the American Academy in Rome is particularly strategic for the region in light of the opening of the OGR, a unique example of industrial reconversion in Europe that aims to unite two souls under the same roof, artistic and technological research,” said Massimo Lapucci, Secretary General of Fondazione Sviluppo e Crescita CRT.

The inaugural CRT Fellow, Rä di Martino, is an internationally acclaimed artist and filmmaker living in Turin. In an effort to expand her way of working with moving images and photography, her project will involve researching experimental Roman films and video of the 1960s, 1970s, and 1980s in the archives of the Cineteca Nazionale Fondazione SCS Rome. She anticipates using this research in a new video project that incorporates themes from these films and breaks from standard styles of film, documentary, and video art.

Spring 2017
Current Fellows share the favorite places they’ve discovered in Rome.

1. GIARDINO DEGLI ARANCI
   on the Aventine Hill
   This is a lovely little pedestrian path that my daughter calls the “secret passage,” and walking up it you get a gorgeous view through a door that leads into the Giardino degli Aranci.
   — Jessica Marglin

2. CHAPEL OF SAINT ZENO
   Via di Santa Prassede, 9
   I must utter a blasphemy, that the grand churches of Rome—soaring above my frail human form—don’t appeal to me. Instead, I visit the tiny side chapel of Saint Zeno at the Church of Santa Prassede. The chapel is built to the human scale.
   — Matthew Neill Null

3. THE NON-CATHOLIC CEMETERY
   Via Caio Cestio, 6
   Magical!
   — E. V. Day

4. FONTE EGERIA
   Via dell’Almone, 105
   Fonte Egeria is one of the springs around Rome where local residents fill up all the plastic containers they own with naturally effervescent water as an alternative to fueling the Italian bottled water industry. You can buy a plastic cup for 5 cents to enjoy a refreshing break.
   — Dorian Borbonus & Sophie Crawford Waters

5. IL PARCO DEGLI ACQUEDOTTI
   Parco Regionale Appia Antica, Via Lemonia
   A large, open-program green space about 5kms outside of the Aurelian Walls. The space is defined by fragments of the Aqua Claudia and Aqua Marcia (turned Acqua Felice in 1586). The park uses innovative management strategies, partnering with farmers to find productive uses for the large expanses surrounding the infrastructure. To reach the park: a short trek by metro line A, exiting at Giulio Agricola or Subaugusta stops.
   — Kristi Cheramie
Founded in 1894, the American Academy in Rome is the oldest American overseas center for independent study and advanced research in the arts and humanities. A not-for-profit, privately funded institution, the Academy awards the Rome Prize to a select group of artists and scholars annually, after an application process that begins each fall. The winners, selected by independent juries through a national competition process, are invited to Rome the following year to pursue their work in an atmosphere conducive to intellectual and artistic experimentation and interdisciplinary exchange. Awards are offered in the following categories: Literature, Music Composition, Visual Arts, Architecture, Landscape Architecture, Design, and Historic Preservation and Conservation, as well as Ancient, Medieval, Renaissance and Early Modern, and Modern Italian Studies. The Academy also invites a select group of Residents, Affiliated Fellows, and Visiting Artists and Scholars to work together within this exceptional community in Rome.

Fondata nel 1894, l’American Academy in Rome è il più antico centro americano fuori dagli Stati Uniti dedicato allo studio indipendente e alla ricerca avanzata nelle arti e nelle discipline umanistiche. L’Accademia è un’istituzione senza scopo di lucro finanziata grazie all’appoggio di privati che offre ogni anno la borsa di studio Rome Prize a un gruppo di artisti e studiosi. Il processo di selezione è affidato a un concorso nazionale negli Stati Uniti che prende avvio in autunno e che si avvale della valutazione di giurie indipendenti: i vincitori sono invitati a Roma a condurre il proprio lavoro in un’atmosfera di libertà intellettuale e artistica e di scambio interdisciplinare. La borsa di studio premia persone che operano nelle arti (architettura, architettura del paesaggio, arti visive, composizione musicale, conservazione e restauro dei beni storico-artistici, design e letteratura) e nelle discipline umanistiche (studi classici, medievali, sul Rinascimento e sulla prima età moderna, e sull’Italia moderna). L’Accademia, inoltre, invita a Roma alcuni prestigiosi esponenti delle arti e degli studi umanistici (Residenti), borsisti scelti in collaborazione con altre importanti istituzioni e un selezionato gruppo di altri artisti e studiosi a unirsi e a lavorare insieme ai Borsisti all’interno della nostra eccezionale comunità.
